

FRIDAY, JUNE 19, 2015 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

A weak storm system swinging through British Columbia and Washington today will give us a 20-40% chance of a shower or some sprinkles, especially this morning and early this afternoon. Highs will be closer to average today around 70 with the best chance for showers and sprinkles staying to our north around downtown Seattle. Mostly cloudy skies to start this morning may turn partly sunny at times as we get closer to lunchtime, then partly sunny skies are expected this afternoon with maybe even some mostly sunny skies possible later in the day. Southwesterly winds may briefly gust past 10 mph early this morning, but overall they should stay between 5 and 10 mph during the morning hours. Some lulls in the wind speed are forecast as we approach midday with the wind becoming more westerly this afternoon and eventually more northerly late. A short lived ridge will build across our area on Saturday providing more sunshine as northerly flow returns and hangs on through Sunday with high clouds pushing back towards us.
