

SATURDAY, JUNE 20, 2015 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

A few high level clouds are sliding to our east toward the sunrise at this time, but basically we'll see lots of sunshine this morning. A few fair weather clouds will puff up this afternoon over the Olympic Range across the Sound (with maybe even a shower over there), however we will likely stay sunny to mostly sunny this afternoon as more high clouds start approaching from the southwest late. After a cooler start, temps will warm up nicely this afternoon topping out in the mid 70s. Light and variable winds early this morning will become a north and northwest breeze around 5 mph as we head through lunchtime. Then the wind should come mainly out of the north mid-late afternoon picking up to around 10 mph with a gust up to 15 mph not out of the question in the usually breezier period of 5-8 PM. High clouds will continue to stream in overhead tonight mixing with our sunshine Sunday morning, then we return to mostly sunny skies Sunday afternoon as highs reach the upper 70s. Monday will be slightly cooler thanks to onshore flow.
