

FRIDAY, AUGUST 12, 2016 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Much like yesterday, today will start off with some hazy sunshine and temps quickly making their way towards 90 by lunchtime. Dewpoints once again will be in the mid 70s and with highs around 92, our heat index is projected to be around or just over 100 this afternoon. The good news is that we should have a little more breeze today out of the southwest in the 6 to 12 mph range this afternoon. Look for clouds to build mid to late morning with our 40% chance of showers and storms from 11 AM to 5 PM. The short term models show that most of the action today should occur to our north, but we will likely have to keep a watchful eye at times. Tonight and Saturday morning we'll have a 40% chance that a shower or storm could sneak into central Ohio from the northwest out ahead of our approaching storm system. Thankfully the majority of the models keep us dry tonight and Saturday morning with showers and storms associated with a cold front moving into our area later Saturday. It will also be the windiest day this week on Saturday. Then look for the best chance of wet weather Saturday night and we are not out of the woods on Sunday as the front appears as though it may stall over our region allowing a continued threat of precipitation through Sunday night and maybe even Monday.
