

THURSDAY, AUGUST 11, 2016 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

As expected this morning is starting off with less action on radar, which is great news, except that temps in the middle 70s right now will see more hazy sunshine this morning heating us up faster than yesterday. Look for highs to top out near 90 this afternoon and with dewpoints in the mid 70s, we'll see the heat index around 100. Light winds will become an occasional southwest breeze at 4-8 mph by this afternoon. While our sunshine mixes with some clouds this morning, we'll find a 20% chance of a shower or storm, then this afternoon hit or miss showers and storms will pop up across Ohio giving us a 40% chance through this evening. Friday's forecast is very similar with just a little more breeze in the afternoon. Then an area of low pressure will move through the southern Great Lakes pushing a cold front into the Ohio Valley this weekend. The most likely window for showers and storms appears to be midday Saturday through midday Sunday since the low pressure center slides by to our north with ease, but the cold front struggles a little more to clear Columbus.
