

MONDAY, AUGUST 1, 2016 – 7 AM WEATHER FORECAST

The weather today remains sticky and warm with light wind, generally from the northeast at less than 5 mph. Clouds will be slower to break than yesterday with some sunshine by mid to late morning as the high reaches the mid to upper 80s, and the heat index reaches the lower 90s. There is a 20 percent chance for a shower or storm through most of the day, then a 40 percent chance for a shower or storm from 5-11 PM as another disturbance tracks across the area with the front that is sitting over us. The good news is that the front will push southeast of us later tonight, allowing for cooler and more comfortable weather for a few days, beginning tomorrow morning. Despite the lower humidity tomorrow, a few showers and maybe a storm could pop up with the heating of the day as an upper level disturbance crosses the area. It looks like Wednesday through Friday will be dry with a warming trend and a return to southerly wind Friday.
