

TUESDAY, AUGUST 2, 2016 – 7 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Slightly less humid air will push south into the area today, with a little more in the way of sun than yesterday, but still quite a bit of cloud cover. Winds will be northeasterly and light this morning, picking up from mid-afternoon on to around 5-10 mph with a few higher gusts, and a shift to more easterly late in the day. A upper level disturbance over downstate New York will drop southeast and provide a 20 percent chance for a shower from 11 AM to 6 PM, with a slight chance for thunder during the heating of the day, from 1-6 PM. Any showers will push southwest of us before the end of the day. Tonight to tomorrow morning will be mostly cloudy and more comfortable, then expect brighter skies and a warming trend as southerly flow returns for the second half of the week. The next front will move through quickly on Saturday, bringing very warm and humid weather ahead of it as well as a 40 percent chance for a shower or storm during the day.
