

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2016 – 7:30 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Our most pleasant weather of the championship will arrive today—compliments of a high pressure system. Abundant sunshine is in store with low humidity as dewpoints sit in the low to mid 50s today. It will be a little cooler this morning as we're starting off in the 50s, but highs will return to the mid 70s this afternoon. Winds will typically be between 5-10 mph, but start out from the south-southeast then slowly rotate throughout the day. By 1 pm they'll be out of the northwest. The high pressure system will continue to control our weather tonight and tomorrow too, which means more dry weather. Tonight will bring more clear skies and lows dropping to near 60 and winds out of the south between 4-8 mph. Tomorrow we're looking at a blend of sunshine and clouds and highs back to the low 80s. Morning winds will be out of the south-southwest. Then for the afternoon, they'll be out of the southwest. Throughout the day, they'll be in the 7-14 mph range. The next potential rain and storm producer looks to arrive early Wednesday afternoon in the form of a cold front.
