

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2016 – 7 AM WEATHER FORECAST

After picking up 1.62" of rain yesterday and another .01" right after midnight, we'll be treated to drier weather over the next few days. A stray lake effect shower can't be ruled out this morning, but the chance is a minimal 20% through 2 pm. Otherwise, we're looking at decreasing clouds today as high pressure begins to build in. It will control our weather through Tuesday, which means a return of more seasonable conditions. It will be much cooler today with highs only in the low 70s and less humid as well with dewpoints in the mid 50s. Our winds will still be breezy through 10 am, but will subside to 5-10 mph during the late morning and generally be out of the northwest to west-northwest for much of the day. Expect clear, cool weather tonight with light winds and lows dipping into the mid 50s. Sunny skies are in store tomorrow with highs in the mid 70s. The next potential rainmaker looks to arrive in the form of a cold front on Wednesday morning.
