

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 2016 – 7 AM WEATHER FORECAST

A cold front will push across the area today and bring the threat for scattered showers and thunderstorms through 4 pm. During that timeframe we'll sit at a 40% chance for scattered showers and storms. The system isn't as strong as the previous ones that we've seen during the championship. At this point, it looks like we won't receive much rain (under .10"). However, if a thunderstorm develops over us that would change and that number could go up to less than .50" of rain. Otherwise with highs near 70, we'll see temperatures sitting in the upper 60s for much of the day. Dewpoints will begin in the low 60s, but drop to the mid 50s by this evening. Winds will predominately be out of the north, but switch from out of the west-northwest early to out of the north-northeast by the evening. They will start out between 5-10 mph but increase to 7-14 mph around 11 am and 8-16 mph around 3 pm. Another high pressure system will start to build in tomorrow, which will result in mostly clear skies building back in tonight and tomorrow. Pleasant conditions look to return for the final day of the championship tomorrow.
